

Reading Micro-expressions

As seen on the TV series
“Lie to Me”

HARD SCIENCE FOR HUMAN SKILLS

When a person experiences an emotion the body reacts in an instantaneous, involuntary, observable way that results in an expression that can last for seconds or even minutes. When an individual tries to hide the emotion this very same expression is masked but not before it leaks out for the briefest of time – less than one tenth of a second. This leakage is called a micro-expression and it is constant regardless of gender, race, training or intent. Very few individuals can detect and interpret these indicators of what is going on inside someone's head without training.

Dr Paul Ekman and his associates at the Ekman Group have spent the last 30 years researching emotion and developing the Micro-expression Training Tool (METT) for law enforcement and national security agencies in the United States. New Intelligence is the Australasian partner of the Ekman group and now provides micro-expression training for the public and private sectors.

In just over 4 hours participants will recognise how to distinguish the 7 basic emotions that are often confused and misinterpreted. Most will improve their ability to detect and read hidden emotions by up to 80%.

The core learning outcomes are:

- Defining an emotion
- Demonstrating an understanding of the function of the universal emotions
- Differentiating between mood, traits, emotions and psychopathology
- Detecting and recognising macro and micro expressions
- Demonstrating an ability to respond appropriately to emotion

Who should attend?

Anyone who is engaged in obtaining information from others, who requires understanding of motivation, intent, truthfulness and integrity, and who has a need to detect indicators of emotion such as fear, contempt, disgust, anger and surprise.

New Intelligence is the Australasian agent for The Ekman Group - the world's foremost authority in research on emotions and deception - and Australia's leading provider of intelligence analysis, interviewing and information elicitation training programs.

In May 2008, a Jamaican national who was trying to board an Air Jamaica flight at Orlando airport was stopped by members of the US Transport Safety Administration. He was searched and found to have baggage that concealed two galvanized pipes, end caps, two containers of ball bearings, batteries, two containers with an unknown liquid, a laptop and bomb-making literature.

The man was legally in the country and it was not his macro behaviour that alerted officers to him but rather his micro behaviour – his micro-expression of emotion. A TSA spokesman said that behaviour identification officers like the one who spotted Brown are plain-clothes officers trained to watch for suspicious behaviour at airports. "When people are doing things that are deceptive, they exhibit behaviours that are involuntary," he said. "Our officers are very well trained to identify these behaviours".

What training is this spokesman talking about?

The training that has been delivered to nearly 16,000 officers of the Transport Safety Administration to help them better detect and deal with emotional leakage that all humans exhibit when being deceptive.
